

Tell the FCC to Reconsider Banning New Foreign Drones

As you may know, the FCC recently took actions that prevent most foreign drone manufacturers, including the two most widely used drones on the market, from bringing you their newest drone models and other technologies. While they can continue to sell products that are already available to U.S.-based customers, DAA feels strongly that American drone users deserve access to industry-leading drones that meet business needs as they evolve. Farmers, business owners, public safety officers, inspectors and more cannot afford to wait for approved systems to catch up – lives and livelihoods could be at stake!

DJI has initiated a formal petition to appeal the FCC's decision and reconsider its placement on the Covered List, and the FCC is asking for public input on whether it should grant this appeal.

That's where drone users like you come in.

This is an opportunity to tell the FCC how important these drones, cameras, gimbals and more are to you and your business or the public you serve. Comments that are constructive and provide respectful explanations to the FCC are the most compelling, as well as those that describe how these products support your needs and how other options in the market may lack the capabilities you need from your drones.

If you are willing to help, please share your personal story with the FCC – we've included instructions on how to do so on the following pages. DAA is here to help too, so don't hesitate to reach out and we can provide more detailed instructions for how to submit your comment.
